"People in our city, as well as Wheeling, W. Va., and different points along the Oblo, have a reputation of talking in a manner all of our own. There is no accent especially noticeable, but the peculiarity of the speech is the inflection or rising of the last world in a sentence, and then dropping down again; as, for instance, 'Are you going to Alle-ghany?' In the Alleghany, the gha part is propogneed with the rising inflection. Our speech is said by outsiders, on this account, to be sunc.

WOMEN AND FLOWERS.

if Eve's Daughters Must Indulge in Hob-hies why Not Let Nature Farnish Furnish Them !

Of course all women are not extreme faddlists, but all women who are alive have tendencies to faddism that need to have tendencies to faddism that need to be watched, says Womankind. Have enhusiasms in abundance if you will, don't depress a natural enhusiasm, but a fad is not an enhusiasm. But have the first back of it that a real enhusiasm is the only renedy for faddism. The fad is taken up usually because the mind and soul are appealed to by nothing greater. The way then to dislodge the fad is to awaken a real enthusiasm for something capable of commanding the respect and the best thoughts of a thinking person.

thing capable of commanding the respect and the best thoughts of a thinking person.

What can do this so well as Mother Nature? In all the universe what so capable of exciting real enthusiasm and admiration as the universe itself in its many diverse manifestations to us? Every woman who looks at the wonders of the heavens on a starry night may not be fitted for deiving in the deep mysteries of astronomy; every woman who stoops to pick up a pebble from the brook's brim may not be designed for the study of the formation of the earth's crust; every woman who plucks the simple daisy may not be capable of collecting and classifying the world's flora, but every woman, no matter what her surroundings, can cultivate at least a few flowers, whether it be a $10,000 or-chid or in a few tornato cans with jarged edges sitting on her window sill, and every woman who gives her collection of plants—be it large or small—the attention they require, will have a warmer appreciation of nature's wondown, will have a growth of mind and soul that will leave little inclination for the unhealthy, exotic fads of the day.

Look for a Slight Depression in the End of the Can. In buying tin-cannel vegetables or fruits those only should be selected that have a slight depression in the end of have a slight depression in the can. This, by experts, is accepted as proof that the contents of the can are in proper condition. If the end of the can is raised or bulged reject it, as that is a proof that the contents of the can were not heated sufficiently at the limb of seniling, or that in the past or present they have fermented. If cans are ordered by the dozen the members of the household who inspect the supplies should return all cans having such an appearance. Lead-polsoning is not to be feared from good brands of timed goods if the contents of the cans are emptied as soon as opened into earthenware or glass. When glass jars are used keep the fruit or vegetables in them from contact with the rubber band. Though there is little danger from their contact, there have, it is said, been a few cases in which poisoning is thought to have been caused by chemical changes in the rubber when in touch with acid.—Boston Journal.

just before going to bed is sure to produce indigestion and render sleep impossible is now happily exploded. Something of a light, palatable nature in the stomach is one of the best aids to quietade and rest.

Some physicians have declared, indeed, that a good deal of the prevalent insomain is the result of an unconscious craying of the stomach for food in persons who have been unduly frightened by the opinion that they must not eat before going to bed, or who have, like many nervous women, been keeping themselves in a state of semi-starvation.

The enterthinment was conducted on the most elaborate scale, and not one man of the many invited was allower to become a wall flower. If there were not enough girls to go around they divided themselves, so to speak, and kept each and every guest from feeling a slight. Now and again the blush of shame was seen to turn on many a many cheek as he reflected of what he had been suilty of in the past, but, on the whole, the men had a most enjoyable time, and were prepared to wish that leap year might come once in two years at least.

The girls were perfect hostesses, and sverything was done in the mont approved style, even to ordering the punch, wherein they displayed great form.

If people must tell telegraph stories why not tell truthful and reasonable ones-such as are susceptible of proof For instance, why has nobody thought it worth while to tell the world about It worth while to tell the world about Tanquary's dog? There is a narrative—beautiful, chaste and instructive, and one to which every operator on the Denver & Rio Grande from Denver to Pueblo will swear. The facts are simple and elevating. Tanquary was an operator at Graneros, Col., a metropolis made up of a freight car, set off to one side of the road for use as a telegraph office, and the house of the section foreman. Sundry coyotes and other wild fowl raised their volces in insurrection in the night and the sand and rocks baked and quivered in the day. And Tanquary got lonesome.

Tanquary got lonesome.

Perham sent him a dog. A mean-looking animal of mingled breeding, mostly bad, and with a tail of the length, breadth and thickness of a banana. But he was welcome to Tanquary, who didn't even have an occasional tramp to shoot at, or any other permissible means of relaxation. Tanquary taught the dog to go to the section foreman's house, where he boarded, and fetch his lunch, aithough at first the dog was inclined to make a Roman holiday of the food, causing Tanquary much irritation and fatigue from beating him. The operator taught the dog to stand on his head, to leap sidewise, to chew tobacco, and some other accomplishments. And on his own account the dog secretly set to work to learn other things, of which Tanquary knew nothing. The two were much attached to each other, as is the case always with people of similar habits.

So much so that when Tanquary went on his customary semi-annual trip north to see if Denver was still there, and to help to renovate, reconstruct and paint it, he took the dog slong. They had sundry adventures, which may be passed over in silence and sorrow, and finally brought up in a poker game behind a barber shop in Wausee street, three utter strangers having decided to gather in the telegrapher's six months salary. They played with great energy and unceasingly, until the railroad man had reached the drogs of his pocketbook. He looked about him in sorrow, and his cyes fell on his dog, which had taken a position on a chair across the room and which seemd to be much interested.

"If you people are sports," said Tan, "you'll let me put that dog in against a dollar's worth of excitement and we will go it a little longer." Then he told of the accomplishments of the dog and put him through a few tricks. The dog seemed to be worried about it, and you could see he was not at all satisfied with his new duty of masquerading as a fack-pot. The three sports, being satisfied with the animal's educational advantages, acceded to the operator's request.

Whereupon the game became one of life and death. Tanquary after the draw found himself possessed of two kings and the same number of tens. All but two of the strangers fell by the way-side and Tan was getting worried about the single opponent he had, for the fellow had held up three cards. The operator weighed his hand, looked at it, felt it and tested it by all his other senses, for he didn't want to fritter away his dog on nothing. Suddenly he heard a sound as of the falling of manna. His telegraphic ear caught from some mysterious source these Morse characters:

Tanquary was one of those men who did not inquire into the whys and wherefores of Providence. When a miracle was performed, the purport of which was to inform him that the other man was bluffing severely on deuces, he accepted it without cavil and played back with all his strength. The result was that he garnered $2.85 on that pot and was staked for the next deal.

They started in again and Tan got three kings. He was inclined to bet like an amateur in the hands of a tout at a race-track, but suddenly across his organ of hearing came the low, sullen statement:

threw down his kings, losing ten cents. On the next hand he reaped $12 on a spirit manifestation by telegraph of a pair of fives in one man's hand, a bobtail flush in that of another and two pairs, kings up. In that of the third, while he himself had three small threes. As the night progressed the operator grew in wealth until one by one of the three sports fell by the wayside, and in the gray of the morning the man from Graneros gathered up $1.743 50 and rose to $60.

stood for live nours on the chair to the rear of the other men, and the oper-ator saw that his small stiff tall was sandwiched between two uprights be-longing to the back of the furniture. As he looked the tail took on action and this message was borne to him:

Faith Curists.

Faith Curists.

New York Press: The ridiculous perversions to which some of the commonest principles of free government are sometimes liable are strikingly illustrated by the action of a coroner's jury in Chicago recently. After hearing testimony regarding the death of a resident who had been treated by "faith curists." that remarkable body refused to make any recommendations, on the score that "this is a free country, and people have a right to believe as they see fit." Mormonism, it will be recalled, to make any recommendations, on the score that "this is a free country, and jeeple have a right to believe as they see fit." Mormonism, it will be recalled, was justified by its apostles on precisely the same theory.

No right-minded American citizen has a desire to interfere with the religious belief of others. Freedom of worship and freedom of thought constitute two of the fundamental principles of American institutions. But it is prepositerous to stretch these principles to the extent of sanctioning practices which endanger the health and welfare of society. This is what is actually done when "faith curisti" are permitted to ply their trade unchecked and unmolested. Few if any of these enthusiasts pretend to know anything about the science of disease or the art of medicine. They do not even pretend to make a diagnosis of the cases which come under their view. Worse still, most of them stubbornly decline to report such cases to the public authorities, as in many states the law requires they should. As a consequence, any community where they are allowed to operate without let or hindrance is liable to become the victim of some contagious malady, some infectious plagua, before it has an opportunity to arrest the trouble. It is the cilimax of nongense to insist that because "this is a free country" a few fanalicy are at liberty thus to propagate disease—ignorantly, perhaps, but nevertheless to propogate it. Without question, many of the "faith curists" are honest, well-meaning people. It is likely, too, that they are firmly convinced of the infallible efficacy of their method of healing. But this form of treatment runs directly this countries to the experience and common counter to the
